$50,000 can go a long way, and the Minnesota company CoreSpine Technologies is ready to put that money to good use.

The Minneapolis-based company was recently named the winner of the 2008 Minnesota Cup.

As part of the first place prize, CoreSpine Technologies will receive $50,000 in seed capital, consulting by Wells Fargo and professionals from area law firms, accounting firms, PR & marketing, business organization services from the Maslon law firm, one year of access to "HillSearch" from the James J. Hill Reference Library, a scholarship to attend The Collaborative's upcoming Minnesota Venture Finance Conference and a national news story over the ARA Content Network.

Launched in March 2005, the Minnesota Cup is a statewide contest that seeks out, supports and promotes Minnesota's newest and most innovative business concepts.

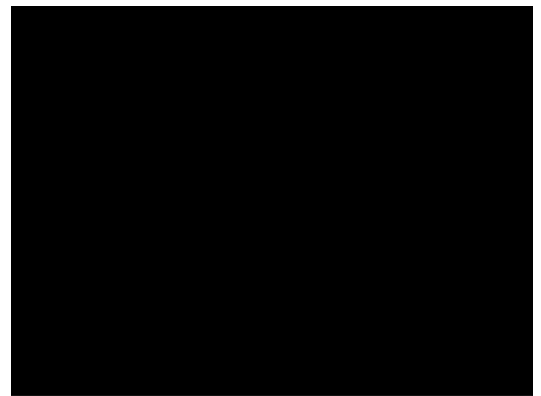

CoreSpine Technologies is a company that is focused on developing and producing advanced surgical devices for the complete or selective removal of nucleus material from the lumbar disc space.

Wednesday morning on KARE 11 First Edition, co-founders of CoreSpine Technologies, Christine Horton and Britt Norton, said the company's first products will set the standard for preparing the spinal disc for minimally invasive interbody fusion and disc nucleus replacement devices.
